

A Quick Guide to Suspension of Studies

1. Suspension or intermission of studies, from now on referred to simply as ‘suspension’, is always going to be a last resort, but it may become necessary if you are unable to carry out your studies to the required standard and it is plausible that a period away from Oxford will remedy this. Please note the fundamental difference between suspension and rustication. “Rustication” refers to expulsion as a punishment, such as for non-payment of fees, and is not an applicable term for the process outlined here.
2. Suspension is not to be taken lightly. Intermitting your studies is disruptive, so it is only to be undertaken if, in your view and the College’s, carrying on with your studies is impossible or near impossible.
3. To make the break complete, and also so as not to make suspension seem more attractive an option than it is, there are strict rules about what suspension entails. In particular, suspended students are not allowed in College for any reason unless they have special permission from the Tutor for Undergraduates or the Dean (rarely granted). Suspended students are usually expected to leave College within 48 hours of suspension being confirmed, and may not leave any belongings in storage during their suspension.
4. Normally, suspension will be for a year: you will leave with the intention of picking up your studies where you left them in a year’s time. Often however, it will be possible to return at the beginning of the equivalent term if you have suspended part-way through a term, and in exceptional circumstances other variations may be possible.
5. If you are considering suspension, the first thing to do is to consult your Personal Tutor, who will then usually contact the Tutor for Undergraduates and the Academic Administrator. You may also contact either of these latter two directly, but in that case we will always consult your Personal Tutor. We will respect a request for suspension, but will only allow it if it is clear that it is the right course of action.
6. If all parties agree that suspension is reasonable and appropriate, you will need to get a certificate from the College doctors stating that you are unfit to study. (If your reason for suspending is not medical, you will be advised individually as to any evidence requirements). Once we have that, the normal process is for a meeting to be arranged involving the student, the Personal Tutor, the Tutor for Undergraduates, and the Academic Administrator. (In some circumstances this can be an online meeting.) The case for suspension will be discussed and then usually (if it has got this far) agreed, the terms of suspension will be set out, and you will be able to ask any questions.
7. At this meeting and subsequently, the terms for your return will also be agreed, which in the case of suspension on medical grounds will - as a minimum – require a medical certificate, usually from the College doctor, stating that you are fit to return to your studies. These terms, including dates, will be sent to you in a letter as soon as possible after the meeting mentioned in 6. above.
8. Students are expected to remain in contact with their Personal Tutor during suspension.
9. Suspension has a bearing on the level of access a student has to the University (Appendix A), and will affect financial circumstances (Appendix B) and – if applicable – visa arrangements (Appendix C). It is the student’s responsibility to ensure they have reviewed all information available before suspending.

10. In virtually all cases, suspension is by mutual agreement, but the College does also have the power to enforce suspension in exceptional circumstances. The procedures for this are set out in the 'Fitness to Study' document.

Fuller details about suspension, especially in more complex cases, are contained in the 'Fitness to Study' document, to which this 'Quick Guide' is only an introduction.

Appendix A: the University

The university's guidelines concerning changes in student status are available online, here: www.ox.ac.uk/students/academic/guidance/undergraduate/status

(Home > Oxford students > Academic matters > Study guidance > Undergraduate > Changes in student status, last accessed 11 September 2023).

As the university's policy states, during their suspension, students ...

- can keep their University card and SSO access and, with them, can continue to use University libraries and online resources, including email;
- can use the Counselling Service and receive the same level of support as other students, including online support for those who live far from Oxford;
- can remain in touch with their disability advisor (if relevant), but cannot access disability services (which can include specialist SpLD tuition, specialist mentoring, assistive technology training, proof-reading and library assistance); and
- will not receive any formal teaching (including access to lectures, whether in person or recorded).

Appendix B: Finances

Students are reminded that it is their responsibility to ascertain the impact of suspension on their financial position, especially if they are in receipt of a Student Loan. The College cannot offer financial advice and does not have the ability to intercede with the Student Loans Company on behalf of a student. This university webpage offers some guidance:
